

Subject: Request for Feedback and Future Opportunities

Dear xxxx,

I trust this message finds you well. This is Dan Kenney reaching out to you. We had the opportunity to discuss a Raspberry Pi project, fondly referred to as the Swiss Army controller, in the middle of last year. Although the project did not secure funding, I thought it was a great idea.

I'd be grateful if you could spare a moment to provide constructive feedback on my interview skills, system engineering, and, particularly, the structure of my bill of materials. While I am confident in my interview performance and possess extensive experience in system engineering, my background in electronics engineering is largely self-taught. I suspect that the format of my bill of materials may not have been as polished as you would have liked, possibly impacting the project's funding outcome. Any insights you could share regarding my performance would be invaluable.

Looking ahead, I am keen on the prospect of participating in future projects, especially those of a remote nature. I found our previous interaction positive, and I believe you'd be a good boss. The challenging nature of the controller project appealed to me, and I believe it would be a rewarding experience. My interview with Triple Crown took place over six months ago, and I am open to the possibility of direct employment if it aligns with your preferences and contractual obligations.

I sincerely hope your wedding was a joyous occasion, and I extend warm wishes for a strong and prosperous marriage. I eagerly await any feedback or opportunities you may have, and I look forward to the possibility of working together in the future.

Best regards,

Daniel Kenney
